Dear :

This is in response to your authorized representative's submission dated September 30, 2008, requesting a ruling on the meaning of the term "State law or regulation" under § 817(d)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code. Additional information was submitted in a letter dated December 12, 2008.

FACTS

Company is a corporation organized under the laws of Country X. Company's principal office is located in Country X. Company represents that it anticipates filing its initial United States income tax return for calendar Year 1.

Company is wholly owned by Parent, a corporation organized under the laws of State Y.

Company does not maintain a permanent office in the United States, however, Company determined that its general asset account will be maintained in the United States in the form of an account with a State Z bank. (Company's United States life insurance company affiliates currently maintain their general asset accounts with the same State Z bank, and as a matter of convenience Company will do so as well.)

Company issues life insurance products with respect to which the cash surrender value and death benefit varies with the investment performance of assets held in separate accounts. The premiums, less any applicable policy charges, are allocated to separate accounts established by Company pursuant to authority granted under Country X law. A provision under Country X law prevents Company from using the assets in the separate accounts in its general account. Company's Legal Counsel in County X has issued an opinion that assets credited to a separate account of Company are not available to pay the amounts due to creditors whose claims do not relate to that separate account. Company's life insurance contracts are designed to comply with the applicable provisions of U.S. tax law: §§ 72, 817(h), 7702, and 7702A. Company proposes to issue contracts to non-U.S. persons, but may issue contracts to U.S. person in the future.

Company has filed an election to be treated as a domestic corporation for all purposes of the Internal Revenue Code, in accordance with § 953(d). Company's election statement was filed in accordance with Rev. Proc. 2003-47, 2003-2 C.B. 55. Company represents that it will satisfy all requirements of § 953(d) so that it will be treated as a domestic corporation for all U.S. tax purposes. Company states that it qualifies as a life insurance company as defined in § 816 and is subject to tax under § 801.

REQUESTED RULING

For purposes of § 817(d)(1) of the Code, the accounts to which Company allocates all or part of the amounts received under life insurance contracts issued by Company and, which pursuant to Country X law, are segregated from the general asset accounts of Company, will be treated as accounts that are segregated from the general asset accounts of Company, "pursuant to State law or regulations."

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 817(h)(1) of the Code provides that, for purposes of subchapter L, § 72 (relating to annuities), and § 7702(a) (relating to the definition of a life insurance contract), a variable contract (other than a pension contract) which is otherwise described in § 817 and which is based on a segregated asset account shall not be treated as an annuity, endowment, or life insurance contract for any period (and any subsequent period) for which the investments made by such account are not, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, adequately diversified.

Section 817(d) defines the term “variable contract,” for purposes of Part I of subchapter L, as a contract that: (1) “... provides for the allocation of all or part of the amounts received under the contract to an account which, pursuant to State law or regulation, is segregated from the general assets of the company,” (2) provides for the payment of annuities, is a life insurance contract, or provides for funding of insurance on retired lives, as described in § 807(c)(6), and (3) in the case of an annuity contract, the amounts paid in, or the amount paid out, reflect the investment return and market value of the segregated asset account, or in the case of a life insurance contract, the amount of the death benefit (or the period of coverage) is adjusted on the basis of the investment return and market value of the segregate asset account, in the case of a life insurance contract, the amount of the death benefit (or the period of coverage) is adjusted on the basis of the investment return and the market value of the segregated asset account, or in the case of funds held under a contract described in § 817(d)(2)(C), the amounts paid in, or the amounts paid out, reflect the investment return and the market value of the segregated asset account.

Section 817(c) provides that, for purposes of Part I of subchapter L, a life insurance company which issues variable contracts shall separately account for the various income, exclusion, deduction, asset, reserve, and other liability items attributable to such variable contracts.

Section 817(a) provides that with respect to variable contracts, increases and decreases in § 807(c) reserves attributable to the appreciation and depreciation in the value of the assets in the segregated asset account are disregarded for purposes of § 807(a) and (b).

Under § 817(b), the basis of each asset in a segregated asset account is increased or decreased by the amount of appreciation or depreciation, to the extent the reserves or other items referred to in § 817(a) are adjusted.

Section 7701 of the Code provides:

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof - ...

(9) United States. The term “United States” when used in a geographic sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State. The term “State” shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is needed to carry out the provisions of this title.

Section 953(d) provides:

(1) In general. If –

(A) a foreign corporation is controlled foreign corporation (as defined in § 957(a) by substituting “25 percent or more” for “more than 50 percent” and by using the definition of United States shareholder under § 953(c)(1)(A)),

(B) such foreign corporation would qualify under Part I or Part II of subchapter L for the taxable year if it were a domestic corporation,

(C) such foreign corporation meets such requirements as the Secretary shall prescribe to ensure that the taxes imposed imposed on it by Chapter 1 of the Code are paid, and

(D) such foreign corporation makes an election to have this paragraph apply and waives all benefits to such corporation granted by the United States under any treaty, for purposes of this title, such corporation shall be treated as a domestic corporation.¹

Section 953(e)(5) provides that for purposes of § 953 and § 954, the determination of whether a contract issued by a controlled foreign corporation or a qualified business unit (within the meaning of § 989(a)) is a life insurance contract or annuity contract shall be made without regard to §§ 72(s), 101(f), 817(h) and 7702 if –

(A) such contract is regulated as a life insurance or annuity contract by the corporation’s or unit’s home country, and

(B) no policyholder, insured, annuitant, or beneficiary with respect to the contract is a United States person.

The issue presented in this case is whether Company’s separate account products are “variable contracts,” as defined in § 817(d)(1) of the Code. The difficulty in this case lies in § 817(d)(1) which requires a variable contract to “provide for the allocation of all or part of the amounts received under the contract to an account which, pursuant to State law or regulation, is segregated from the general assets of the company. (Emphasis added.) The term “State” is defined in § 7701(a)(9)² and (10) which are set forth above. The implication from these paragraphs of § 7701(a) is that the term “State” means that one of the 50 states or the District of Columbia.

This implication is, however, subject to the flush language appearing at the beginning of § 7701(a): “When used in this title, where not otherwise directly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof.” Section 817(d)(1) does not contain a distinctly expressed meaning for “State,” other than one of the 50 states or the District of Columbia. Neither does the legislative history underlying this Code provision. Thus, our task is to determine whether the § 7701(a)(10) meaning of “State – one of the 50 states or the District of Columbia - is “manifestly incompatible with the intent of [federal tax law]” in the context of § 817(d)(1) and a foreign taxpayer that has elected to come within the provisions of § 953(d).

In this case, Company has elected under § 953(d) to be treated for purposes of the federal tax law as a domestic corporation. The only exception to this treatment involves dual consolidated losses. See § 953(d)(3), set forth in footnote 1. However, if Company’s separate account contracts are not treated as variable contracts because “State” is given a restrictive meaning, Company and its U.S. policyholders will in the following respects be treated differently from a situation involving a domestic life insurance company.

Section 817(c) requires that a life insurance company that issues variable contracts separately account from the “various income, exclusion, deduction, asset, reserve, and other liability items properly attributable to such variable contracts.” If Company’s contracts are not variable contracts, even though it has separate accounts protected from Company’s general creditors, the policyholders and Company will not receive separate account treatment. This would be a major difference between the treatment of a domestic life insurance company issuing a similar product and Company, a § 953(d) electing company.

This disparity of treatment is readily seen if we focus on the treatment of the reserves for Company and a domestic company’s separate account products. First, assume that Company’s reserves for its separate accounts do not receive the treatment mandated by § 817(a)-(c) for variable contracts. The reserves established by Company for its life insurance contracts should qualify as life insurance reserves under § 807. Company will be allowed a deduction for increases in the reserve under §§ 805(a)(2) and 807(b) and will be required to include decreases in reserves in gross income under §§ 803(a)(3) and 807(a). The amount of the reserves will be established under § 807(d)(1) as the greater of the net surrender value of the contract or the reserve established under § 807(d)(2). Company represents that, generally, the reserve will be based on the net surrender value of the contracts reflecting the value of the underlying assets.

² Section 7701(a)(9) is actually a definition of the term “United States.” Section 7701(a)(9)’s definition of “United States” helps place § 7701(a)(10)’s definition of “State” in context.

If the value of the underlying assets held in the separate account increases, the cash surrender value of the contract will increase. Company will be entitled to a deduction for the increase in the reserve. No adjustment will be made to the basis of the assets to reflect the increase in market value. When the assets are sold, Company will recognize a capital gain. Accordingly, Company will recognize a current deduction when the value of the assets increases and a future capital gain when the assets are disposed. In contrast, life insurance companies that are subject to § 817(a) would not recognize a current deduction for the increase in reserve attributable to the increase in the value of the assets and, due to the basis adjustment provisions of § 817(d), would not recognize any gain on the disposition of the assets.

Conversely, if the value of the assets held in the separate account decreases, the cash surrender value of the contract will decrease. If § 817(a) does not apply to Company, Company unlike domestic life insurance companies subject to the provisions of § 817(a), will be required to include the decrease in reserves in gross income. No adjustment will be made to the basis of the assets to reflect the decrease in market value. When the assets are sold, Company will recognize a capital loss. Accordingly, Company will recognize current ordinary income when the value of the assets decreases and a future capital loss when the assets are disposed.

If Company's separate account products are not treated as variable contracts, its contracts will receive different treatment from domestic contracts under § 817(h) and the regulations thereunder prescribing diversification rules. The diversification rules under § 817(h) only apply to variable contracts (other than pension plan contracts). Thus, if Company's separate account products are not variable contracts the diversification rules would be inapplicable to them.

The Code's sanction for not meeting the diversification requirements is severe. Section 817(h) provides that, for purposes of subchapter L, § 72, and § 7702(a), a variable contract that does not meet the diversification requirements shall not be treated as an annuity, endowment, or life insurance contract for any period (and any subsequent period) for which the investments made by the segregated asset account are not adequately diversified under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

The diversification rule of § 817(h) was added to the Code in the Tax Reform Act of 1984. The Senate Finance Committee in 1 S. Pt. 98-169, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 546 (1984), explained the purposes of new § 817(h) as follows:

The bill adopts a provision that grants the Secretary of the Treasury regulatory authority to prescribe diversification standards for investments of segregated assets accounts underlying variable contracts. The diversification requirement is provided in order to discourage the use of tax-preferred variable annuities and variable life insurance primarily as investment vehicles. The committee believes that, by limiting a customer's ability to select specific investments underlying a variable contract, the bill will help ensure that a customer's primary motivation in purchasing the contract is more likely to be the traditional economic protections provided by annuities and life insurance.

If Company's separate account products are denied variable account status, then, as stated above, the diversification rules of § 817(h) and the regulations thereunder will not apply to Company's separate account products. The result will be that Company's separate account products will be recognized as life insurance contracts without meeting the diversification rules of the Code and regulations. Further, Congress' stated purpose in enacting the diversification requirements, to discourage the use of tax-preferred variable annuity and variable life insurance primarily as investment vehicles, would be subverted.³

Thus, another anomaly will exist if Company's separate account products are denied variable account status. A foreign insurance company that elected to be treated as a domestic insurance company under § 953(d) would be able to issue separate account products that do not meet the diversification rules, but nevertheless qualify as life, endowment, or annuity contracts. The inside buildup on the electing foreign company's nondiversified contracts would not be subject to current taxation, while the inside buildup on nondiversified contracts issued by domestic companies would be subject to current taxation. This is a dubious result, which does not treat the electing § 953(d) company the same as a domestic company. The electing foreign company is given better treatment and their policyholders given less protection against what Congress saw as an abusive use of separate account products.

The anomalies that we have discussed above with respect to reserves for separate account products and with respect to the diversification standards exist because § 953(d) was added to the Code later than § 817, which was added to the Code in 1984.⁴ We conclude, in light of the anomalies whose existence we have demonstrated, the statutory scheme of § 957(d), permitting an electing foreign insurance company to be treated as a domestic insurance company for all purposes (except with respect to dual consolidated losses) is manifestly incompatible with giving "State" a restrictive meaning in § 817(d)(1), and denying variable contract status to Company's separate account products. We conclude that, in the context of an electing § 953(d) company, "State," in § 817(d)(1) should be interpreted broadly enough to include the jurisdiction exercising statutory or regulatory authority over Company's separate accounts. In this case, that is County X.

Another provision that further supports our conclusion is § 953(e)(5), set forth above. Section 953(e) was added to the Code in 1998 by section 1005(b)(1)(B) of the Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act of 1998, Pub. L. No. 105-277. If the foreign controlled corporation's separate account products are regulated as life insurance or annuity contracts by the home country and no policyholder, insured annuitant, or beneficiary with respect to the contract is a United States person, the reference to § 817(h) is given a restrictive meaning.

CONCLUSION

For purposes of § 817(d)(1) of the Code, the accounts to which Company allocates all or part of the amounts received under life insurance contracts issued by Company and which pursuant to Country X law, are segregated from the general asset accounts of Company, will be treated as accounts that are segregated from the general asset accounts of Company, "pursuant to State law or regulation."
